SENATOR WILLIS IS LAID TO REST IN FAMILY PLOT WHILE FINAL TRIBUTES ARE GIVEN

Thousands of Friends Look on As Ohio's "Favorite Son" Is Interred.

DELAWARE, O., April 4 — (INS)—Interred by the side of his father and mother in the family plot at the Oak Hill cemetery, the remains of the late Senator Frank B. Willis are resting today following a final tribute paid him yesterday by friends of the state and nation.

While thousands of sympathetic friends looked on and surrounded by fellow-members of Senator Willis in congress, the coffin with his remains was gently lowered into the grave to the strains of "The End of a Perfect Day" sung by the Republican Glee club. The song was the same that the Glee club was singing when Senator Willis was stricken when he was about to deliver his homecoming address to his Delaware neighbors and friends last Friday night.

Mrs. Willis Weeps

In the rear seat of a funeral car parked close to the grave, Mrs. Willis veiled and weeping, her daughter, Helen and Lloyd Willis, the brother of the late senator saw the respects paid their relative who was so suddenly taken from their midst.

Thousands of friends and enemies alike of Senator Willis gathered here yesterday to pay a final tribute to the statesman. An endless line of sorrowing people passed at the bier of the late senator during the day until the time for the funeral services. The multitudes of his friends who were unable to gain an entrance to the chapel for the funeral rites, after it had been filled to its capacity, heard the services from loud-speakers placed on the outside of the building.

Was True American

That Senator Willis was a true American and a real comrade was the sentiment expressed by the orations delivered in his memory by his closest friends, Senator Simeon D. Fess of Ohio; former Senator Ralph D. Cole, of Findlay; Dr. Albert Edwin Smith, president of Ohio Northern University and Charles A. Jones, secretary of the senator. Wavering in his speech during the oration, President Smith broke down and wept at the end.

From a pocket Testament which Senator Willis had carried and was in his pocket when he died, Dr. Otto Scott Steele, pastor of the Asbury M. E. church of Delaware, read passages which the senator had marked.

Diplomats and notables of the political circles from all parts of the country attended the final rites. Gov. Vic Donahey, accompanied by his wife headed a delegation of state senators and representatives.

WASHINGTON IS SURPRISED AS FESS IS NAMED

Want to Know Reasons Why He Was Named Temporary G. O. P. Chairman.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 4 — The selection of Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, as temporary chairman and keynote orator of the Republican National Convention somewhat surprised the politicians of Washington today. And there arose in the wake of the announcement considerable speculation as to the reasons underlying the choice.

Fess was chosen by chairman Wm. M. Butler, who is in favor of drafting President Coolidge.

Backed Coolidge

Fess himself was the original promoter of the "Draft Coolidge" movement, and he still is in favor of the convention's disregarding the famous "I do not choose to run" statement and again in pressing the president into service. In Washington and out of Washington, on numerous platforms, the Ohioan has preached the drafting of Coolidge, and has persistently stated his belief that once drafted Mr. Coolidge would not refuse to run.

Hence, his selection as temporary chairman and keynoter was received in Washington with a slight elevation of eyebrows on the part of political observers generally.

May Be Permanent

If, as sometimes happens, the keynoter is made permanent chairman, and if the Republicans at Kansas City ten weeks hence get themselves into a deadlock, and turn their eyes again toward the White House, it might be fortunate indeed to have in the chair a friendly and kindly disposed member of the Draft Coolidge Club.

EXPECT HAYS TO BE IN FOR REAL GRILLING

Will Be Asked to Explain Several Matters Before Teapot Dome Committee.

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 4 — Will H. Hays, former Republican national chairman, now Czar of all Moviedom, will face a real grilling by the Senate Teapot Dome committee on his next and fourth appearance in the witness chair, members said.

Hays will be called, shortly after he returns from a trip to Europe, to explain a number of matters not touched upon or omitted from his testimony on three different occasions since 1924. Committee members planned to handle Hays without gloves when he makes his next appearance as a witness.

Four Questions

Hays will be interrogated on four important subjects:

1.—Albert B. Fall's charge that Hays influenced him to say that the notorious $100,000 "loan" came from Edward B. McLean, Washington publisher, instead of from Edwin L. Doheny, the actual donor.

2.—The discovery of a large number of 4 1-3 per cent Liberty Bonds in Hays' private banking account at Sullivan, Ind., deposited at a time when Hays was reported "broke" due to speculations in the stock market.

3.—The statement of Hays that Harry F. Sinclair returned to him $68,000 in Liberty Bonds when James D. Connery, the "go-between," swore that Hays only got a few thousand, the rest going to pay off his stock market debts.

4.—The charges of the late Senator Edwin F. Ladd (R) of N. D., revealed through other Senators, that Hays tried to influence him to block the Teapot Dome investigation while Ladd was chairman of the Senate public lands committee.

Accept Lenroot's Statement

The Senate committee meanwhile was ready to accept the statement of former Senator Irvine L. Lenroot (R) of Wis., contradicting what was reported to be in Fall's "Alibi" deposition, concerning the Doheny "loan." Lenroot denied that he influenced Fall to use McLean's name as a means of hiding this transaction. The committee will hear Senator Smoot (R) of Utah, at its next session, on the same subject. Smoot privately denied Fall's alleged state-

MUSICAL NIGHT AT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

School Delivers Excellent Music Under Leadership of C. F. Zanglein

It was music night at the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday evening. The members were regaled by a fine concert given by the High School orchestra, under the efficient leadership of C. F. Zanglein.

The following numbers were played; Kiefers Special march, Parade of the Wooden Soldiers; solo by Howard Greeno, "The Song is Ended;" Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, a march, solo by Howard Greeno, "My Blue Heaven;" Selection, "Old Glory," march, Host of Freedom. There are 24 members of the orchestra. The musicians are Howard Greeno, Helen Yates, John Caldwell, Clarence Barnhart, Gladys Harris, Hugh Cartright, violins; James Brown, Richard Nickerson, Waldo Hilyard, James Sampson, clarinets; Charles Kirkpatrick and Willis Liston, cornets; Emmett Barnhart, Donald May, Sheldon Mader, John Terry and Gayiord Rose, saxophones; Charles Brown trombone; Kathryn Walters, bells Elizabeth Roundhouse, Iona Miller, Dorothy May Glick and Peggy Courtright, pianists, and Robert Stout, drums.

One of the most surprising things about the orchestra, is the excellent music they produce in so short a time, when one stops to think, what the leader of the orchestra has to contend with, taking on new members every school term and training them in the art of playing, and assembling of his orchestra, it shows what can be done by a real leader. The secret of his success is, that he is firm and gentle. His pupils worship their master and they obey his instructions to the letter.

Of this number more than one hundred thousand are living in or near the capital city.

ADDS 124 MORE DELEGATES ALL RETURNS SHOW

New York, Wisconsin and Main Throw Support to Democratic Leader.

NEW YORK, April 14— (INS) —Primary returns trickling in from this state, Wisconsin and Maine today indicated that Gov. Alfred E. Smith had 124 additional delegates who will vote for him at the Democratic National convention. Smith delegates now total 244.

He gained 86 votes when the New York districts voted to give him an undivided delegation. In Wisconsin he gained 26. In Maine where Smith supporters had counted upon only 8 votes, the state convention passed a resolution imposing the unit rule, so the governor thereby gained 4 votes unexpectedly.

Arkansas For Smith

The majority of the Arkansas delegation of eighteen are understood to be for Smith, although not instructed for him. Missouri's 36 votes and Georgia's 28, went to "favorite sons," Senators Reed and George, respectively.

Four additional votes will go to Smith when the delegates-at-large from New York are named by the Democratic state committee.

New York's Republican delegates elected yesterday are unpledged to any candidate, although Hoover supporters claimed 47 out the total of ninety.

Three To One Favorite

Meanwhile Wall street bettors today gave Smith a three to one chance to win the Democratic nomination. One brokerage firm reported it had been instructed to place $15,000 on Smith at those odds.

Governor Smith's announcement that he will go south for a vacation was regarded in political circles as a step to "feel out" his strength there, although those closest to him deny his trip has any political significance.

Parisiennes Adopt New Feather Toque

PARIS, April 4 — (UP) — The feather toque, which is really a tight-fitting cap of tesseled feathers, is all the rage right now for night life in Paris. Fashionable Parisian women have adopted it for the theater, the restaurant dinner and the informal bridge-party as well as for a promenade along the Boulevards.

The effect of the feathers is original, creating the impression that milady is wearing an exotic wig of a by-gone period. Gray and blue seem to be the most popular colors although green and old-rose are to be seen in plentiful numbers.

A variation of the mode is found in a dainty little toque of the same order but covered with white velvet flowers which look like hyacinth blossoms.

REST FOR FRIDAY

SANTA BARBARA CAL., April 4—(INS) — Rest, at last. Weary of the world's stormy adulation, Colonel Charles A. Lindberg today is enjoying a respite from his role of the world's most overworked hero.

That long-rumored withdrawal from the limelight has at last eventuated. The lone Eagle has found quiet seclusion on the country estate of Mrs. Harry F. Knight, a few miles from Santa Barbara. There he will remain indefinnitely, according to his friend, Harry F. Guggenheim, president of the Guggenheim foundation for the advancement of aeronautics.

"Believe me," Guggenheim, emphasized, "The whole world won't be able to reach Lindbergh now. He's going to get some rest—at last."

LOVE IS FATAL

VIENNA, April 4 — (INS) — His unrequitted love for Josephine Baker, a colored singer and dancer was believed to have furnished the motive for the suicide of Franz Gabor, a cabaret singer.

Gabor shot himself at 3 a. m., in front of the pavilion cabaret. He was carried into the building where Miss Baker ministered to him until he died shortly afterward.

Newspapers hinted that an unhappy love affair with Miss Baker caused the tragedy.

WASHINGTON IS SURPRISED AS FESS IS NAMED

Want to Know Reasons Why He Was Named Temporary G. O. P. Chairman.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 4 — The selection of Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, as temporary chairman and keynote orator of the Republican National Convention somewhat surprised the politicians of Washington today. And there arose in the wake of the announcement considerable speculation as to the reasons underlying the choice.

Fess was chosen by chairman Wm. M. Butler, who is in favor of drafting President Coolidge.

Backed Coolidge

Fess himself was the original promoter of the "Draft Coolidge" movement, and he still is in favor of the convention's disregarding the famous "I do not choose to run" statement and again in pressing the president into service. In Washington and out of Washington, on numerous platforms, the Ohioan has preached the drafting of Coolidge, and has persistently stated his belief that once drafted Mr. Coolidge would not refuse to run.

Hence, his selection as temporary chairman and keynoter was received in Washington with a slight elevation of eyebrows on the part of political observers generally.

May Be Permanent

If, as sometimes happens, the keynoter is made permanent chairman, and if the Republicans at Kansas City ten weeks hence get themselves into a deadlock, and turn their eyes again toward the White House, it might be fortunate indeed to have in the chair a friendly and kindly disposed member of the Draft Coolidge Club.

EXPECT HAYS TO BE IN FOR REAL GRILLING

Will Be Asked to Explain Several Matters Before Teapot Dome Committee.

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 4 — Will H. Hays, former Republican national chairman, now Czar of all Moviedom, will face a real grilling by the Senate Teapot Dome committee on his next and fourth appearance in the witness chair, members said.

Hays will be called, shortly after he returns from a trip to Europe, to explain a number of matters not touched upon or omitted from his testimony on three different occasions since 1924. Committee members planned to handle Hays without gloves when he makes his next appearance as a witness.

Four Questions

Hays will be interrogated on four important subjects:

1.—Albert B. Fall's charge that Hays influenced him to say that the notorious $100,000 "loan" came from Edward B. McLean, Washington publisher, instead of from Edwin L. Doheny, the actual donor.

2.—The discovery of a large number of 4 1-3 per cent Liberty Bonds in Hays' private banking account at Sullivan, Ind., deposited at a time when Hays was reported "broke" due to speculations in the stock market.

3.—The statement of Hays that Harry F. Sinclair returned to him $68,000 in Liberty Bonds when James D. Connery, the "go-between," swore that Hays only got a few thousand, the rest going to pay off his stock market debts.

4.—The charges of the late Senator Edwin F. Ladd (R) of N. D., revealed through other Senators, that Hays tried to influence him to block the Teapot Dome investigation while Ladd was chairman of the Senate public lands committee.

Accept Lenroot's Statement

The Senate committee meanwhile was ready to accept the statement of former Senator Irvine L. Lenroot (R) of Wis., contradicting what was reported to be in Fall's "Alibi" deposition, concerning the Doheny "loan." Lenroot denied that he influenced Fall to use McLean's name as a means of hiding this transaction. The committee will hear Senator Smoot (R) of Utah, at its next session, on the same subject. Smoot privately denied Fall's alleged state-

School Delivers Excellent Music Under Leadership of C. F. Zanglein

It was music night at the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday evening. The members were regaled by a fine concert given by the High School orchestra, under the efficient leadership of C. F. Zanglein.

The following numbers were played; Kiefers Special march. Parade of the Wooden Soldiers; solo by Howard Greeno, "The Song is Ended;" Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, a march, solo by Howard Greeno, "My Blue Heaven;" Selection, "Old Glory," march, Host of Freedom. There are 24 members of the orchestra. The musicians are Howard Greeno, Helen Yates, John Caldwell, Clarence Barnhart, Gladys Harris, Hugh Cartright, violins; James Brown, Richard Nickerson, Waldo Hilyard, James Sampson, clarinets; Charles Kirkpatrick and Willis Liston, cornets; Emmett Barnhart, Donald May, Sheldon Mader, John Terry and Gaylord Rose, saxophones; Charles Brown trombone; Kathryn Walters, bells Elizabeth Roundhouse, Iona Miller, Dorothy May Glick and Peggy Courtright, pianists, and Robert Stout, drums.

One of the most surprising things about the orchestra, is the excellent music they produce in so short a time, when one stops to think, what the leader of the orchestra has to contend with, taking on new members every school term and training them in the art of playing, and assembling of his orchestra, it shows what can be done by a real leader. The secret of his success is, that he is firm and gentle. His pupils worship their master and they obey his instructions to the letter.

ADDS 124 MORE DELEGATES ALL RETURNS SHOW

New York, Wisconsin and Main Throw Support to Democratic Leader.

NEW YORK, April 14— (INS) —Primary returns trickling in from this state, Wisconsin and Maine today indicated that Gov. Alfred E. Smith had 124 additional delegates who will vote for him at the Democratic National convention. Smith delegates now total 244.

He gained 86 votes when the New York districts voted to give him an undivided delegation. In Wisconsin he gained 26. In Maine where Smith supporters had counted upon only 8 votes, the state convention passed a resolution imposing the unit rule, so the governor thereby gained 4 votes unexpectedly.

Arkansas For Smith

The majority of the Arkansas delegation of eighteen are understood to be for Smith, although not instructed for him. Missouri's 36 votes and Georgia's 28, went to "favorite sons," Senators Reed and George, respectively.

Four additional votes will go to Smith when the delegates-at-large from New York are named by the Democratic state committee..

New York's Republican delegates elected yesterday are unpledged to any candidate, although Hoover supporters claimed 47 out the total of ninety.

Three To One Favorite

Meanwhile Wall street bettors today gave Smith a three to one chance to win the Democratic nomination. One brokerage firm reported it had been instructed to place $15,000 on Smith at those odds.

Governor Smith's announcement that he will go south for a vacation was regarded in political circles as a step to "feel out" his strength there, although those closest to him deny his trip has any political significance.

Parisiennes Adopt New Feather Toque

PARIS, April 4 — (UP) — The feather toque, which is really a tight-fitting cap of tosseled feathers, is all the rage right now for night life in Paris. Fashionable Parisian women have adopted it for the theater, the restaurant dinner and the informal bridge-party as well as for a promenade along the Boulevards.

The effect of the feathers is original, creating the impression that milady is wearing an exoctic wig of a by-gone period. Gray and blue seem to be the most popular colors although green and old-rose are to be seen in plentiful numbers.

A variation of the mode is found in a dainty little toque of the same order but covered with white velvet flowers which look like hyacinth blossoms.

Joy of Living One Sure Indication of Abounding Health

Just Be Yourself and Personality Will Result

By DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

EVERYWHERE you go you find people acting a part. One sees it in the drawing room, in the street cars, in the subways, on the street.

DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

Very few of us are free from artificialities of manner.

Apparently one of the most difficult things to do is to behave naturally.

Seldom, really, do you meet a person who impresses you as thoroughly genuine — who really acts himself as he really is.

In short, all of us are actors at heart!

On the face of it, it ought to be the easiest thing imaginable to conduct yourself in accordance with what you innately are. Trying to be something else, something that is foreign to your nature, by comparison ought to be extremely difficult. Yet somehow we tend to choose the harder course. Why?

The reason we set up artificial standards of conduct for ourselves is because we are gregarious.

We like to associate with large groups—act as the group acts—think like the group. Living alone and thinking independently does not appeal. This natural crowd instinct goes away back to remote days. It was a time that has been called the "herding stage" of civilization.

Then it was that the property of the various tribes and clans consisted of domestic animals, herded together and protected together for purposes of safety.

And just as the animals could better be taken care of in herds, so the people found that they could best take care of themselves when living in groups.

Expression of individuality received a setback. Individuality had to be suppressed for the common good. It was a question of "give and take."

Only those possessing unusual powers of individuality broke through and dominated the others. These exceptional ones became the leaders. The rest followed their lead. It is the same today. We tend to be followers instead of leaders. We behave in accordance with what we think the group standard dictates.

And so, in consequence, our actions are largely artificial. We pretend and make believe because we think that is the way other poeple would like to have us conduct ourselves.

But why be camp followers? The world needs leaders!

Stop acting! Be yourself! Show what you really are!

Practice being yourself. Act as though you don't care what people may think. Don't wonder about them.

Let your own naturalness be your chief concern.

It doesn't really take long to impress people if you are perfectly natural.

Waiting for Their Ship -:- By Fanny Darrell.

"WAIT until our ship comes in, beloved, and then you'll have all the wonderful things in the world. Priceless jewels from the tombs of kings; the finest silks from India; the perfumes of Araby; all the riches of the world shall be poured into your little hands. Persia shall send her finest carpets for your little feet to tread upon; tapestries, paintings, beauties from every land shall be given to you that your lovely eyes may feast ever on beauty. But best of all, the load of love that the ship is bringing to you and to me, shall be ever with us to lighten and brighten our days. And even if the cargo isn't as rich as we think, still there's the love left, and who can deny that this is the greatest of all gifts, my dearest one? Your love for me, and mine for you! So what matter if there be nothing but you and me and a wee home full of love and happiness. For that's all the riches of the world in one and material things fade before the richness of its beauty."

IF YOU'RE GROUCHY YOU'RE NOT WELL

Why Not Trace Ill-Temper to Its Source and Cure It as You Would Some More Obvious Malady?

By DR. ROYAL S COPELAND, M.
United States Senator from New York,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

LAMARTINE said, "Joyousness in nature's garb of health."

This is, indeed, a solemn truth. When perfect health of body exists you are likely to find associated with it sweetness of spirit and joyousness of mind.

A cross child is almost always a tired or sick child. A peevish, irritable, ugly man is likely to be a worn-out or sick man. Joyousness on the contrary is an evidence of health.

Anger, especially uncontrolled anger, is bad for the health. Almost as quickly as anything can do it, anger will derange the digestion, produce a headache and give you a feeling of real illness.

Mind and body are so intimately related that it is hard to tell which comes first—a sick body or a disturbed mind. If there are abounding health and perfect digestion, it is very certain the mind will be at rest and laughter will be near the surface.

Likewise, if the mind is at peace, the functions of the body are carried on with little disturbance. Fear, remorse, hatred, anger—these will disturb the whole body.

I have no doubt we need the trials and unpleasant experiences of life to develop character. But it would be a wonderful world, for a time anyhow, if weather were perfect, business good and life going by like a song. Joyousness would reign supreme.

I wonder if we would tire of such an existence? Personally, I love the seasons, but there is no doubt that the even climate of a State like California is wonderfully appealing.

But when Lamartine talked about "joyousness," it is not probable that he had giggling idiocy in mind. He referred, I assume, to that lightness of spirit that accompanies duty well done, every task honestly attended to, and a full day's work accomplished.

There is a joyousness in doing every task as well as you know how. Such an attitude of mind rests the tired muscles, takes the kinks out and in every way lightens the burdens of life.

It makes no difference which comes first—health or joyousness—does it? But who can doubt that they are twin sisters—peace of mind and soundness of body?

When I meet a grouchy, ill-tempered, ugly man, I want to look at his teeth and tonsils, to inquire into his eating habits and to find out if his elimination is normal. Nine times out of ten you will find that such a man has something wrong with his physical system.

But when a whistling boy comes tearing down the street, a broad grin on his face, you can wager that he is in vigorous health. Joyousness is nature's garb of health.

Cultivate cheerfulness, but guarantee it by having a vigorous, normal body.

Games for Easter Parties.

EASTER parties for the youngsters from eight to twelve, or even older, are made interesting and jolly by a careful selection of games. There are games to play in small quarters and those for large rooms, but there must be a game leader, or a party mother, to keep things moving without friction.

If one has dyed a quantity of eggs, an egg-rolling contest with prizes is a lot of fun, as well as appropriate to the season.

A clothespin relay race is played with two lines of players and the children at the heads of the lines each take as many clothespins in their hands as they can hold, then they pass them rapidly to the next player who must grasp and pass them as rapidly as possible to the next one without dropping them. The one who gets to the end of the line first wins first prize.

There is also a pillow-case relay game that is very funny. Two lines are formed. The heads are given a pillow and a case and they are obliged to take the pillow out of the case and put it back and pass it to the next one, and so on down the line in a certain length of time. The side finishing first wins the prize and a booby prize goes to the slowest.

The old game of "Coffeepot" is a good one for a crowd. One person goes out and then the crowd decides on some special object in the room which is in plain sight and the outsider is called in. Each one is questioned after this fashion: Do you coffeepot? how do you coffeepot? can you use it in a coffeepot? or can you set it on a coffeepot? and so on, until by questioning and guessing they finally locate the article.

Pinning the neck on the giraffe is another version of the donkey game, but it is always merry. A dignified race is one where the contestants take a tableknife and on it balance a dried pea as they walk to the goal; some are steadier than others, but only a small percentage reach the end of the journey. Accidents don't count against a player, but it delays them so they lose in that way.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

Betty Has a Friendly Chat With Mrs. Battle.

"GOODNESS me, please be careful where you step," squeaked a tiny voice in the grasses at Betty's feet.

Betty looked down and there at her feet sat a dear little Beetle Lady all dressed in the richest of rich brown.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," laughed Betty squatting down in the grasses so as to be nearer the little Beetle Lady. "Did I almost step on you? I'm so sorry. I hope I didn't hurt you."

"Well, you didn't step on me," laughed Lady Beetle, "but I'm quite sure if I hadn't called to you just when I did you might have crushed me under your foot. Are you going to gather flowers this morning? If you are I know where there are quite a few pretty ones."

"No, my dear, I was just on my way to school," replied Betty. "And may I ask where you were going?"

"I'm on a baby hunt," replied Lady Beetle.

"Baby Hunt!" exclaimed the astonished Betty. "Have you lost some of your children? Oh, dear, how terrible! Maybe I might be able to help you. My sister got lost one time and——"

"Well, my dear, my babies aren't lost," chuckled Lady Beetle. "But I'm quite sure it's time for them to hatch out and I was just on my way through the meadows to see if I could locate any of them. Goodness me! There's one this very second!" And she ran over the grasses as fast as her six legs could carry her under a low bush. "Oh, come here, Betty, and see my baby."

"I'm on a Baby Hunt."

Betty ran over to Lady Beetle's side and she could hardly believe her eyes when she saw the stupid, long, soft, white worm with its body made of so many rings. It had two big eyes, two jaws, no feet and no wings.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Betty. "You don't mean to tell me, Lady Beetle, that is your baby, do you?"

"Yes indeed that's one of my babies and I'm mighty proud of it, too," laughed Lady Beetle. "Haven't you ever seen a baby beetle before, Miss Betty?"

Betty shook her head. She never had seen a baby beetle before.

"All the baby beetles I've ever seen looked like you only smaller of course," she replied. "I never knew these white worms were children of the beetle family. I've dug them out of the ground in the early Spring when I was planting my garden. Now, how in the world will that child ever grow to look like you, Mrs. Beetle?"

"It does seem strange, doesn't it, Betty," said Lady Beetle, "that a child like that would hatch from a beetle's eggs? But it does and one of these days when it is old enough and has enough to eat it will make a cradle for itself and take a long nap, something like the butterfly children. Then when it awakens, it will crawl out of the pupa case a full-fledged little Beetle Lady like myself. I buried the egg that held that little lady under the ground at the roots of this bush. I just hope that it lives to make a good little Beetle."

Just then the school bell rang and Betty, bidding Lady Beetle good-bye, hurried on to school and that day at Nature Hour she told the class all the interesting things Lady Beetle had old her that morning.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble.

THURSDAY, APRIL 5.

Yielding is sometimes the best way of succeeding.—Proverb.

Variable conditions obtain on this day, according to the mutual and lunar aspects. While affairs may prove lively, a certain jeopardy attends the financial status. New agreements may be taken under advisement, but precaution should be used in signing all papers relating to money or new projects. Diligence and perseverance should bring due returns, judging by the sextile figure of Luna to Saturn. The employment should be safeguarded.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of variable fortunes. While labor and diligence may be stabilized, employment should be safeguarded. Finances should be protected, speculation shunned and new projects cautiously managed. A child born on this day should be clever and versatile, but disposed to extravagance and reckless use of money. Its enlarged ambitions may lead to failure unless precaution, prudence and thrift be instilled in youth.

Love's Embers

ABSORBING SEQUEL TO "Revelations of a Wife"

By Adele Garrison

Madge Learns How the Princess Managed to Disappear.

"THE elevator man never even looked at me," Princess Olina said, continuing her astonishing story, "neither did any one else—at least that I could see. But I was sure everybody could hear my heart thumping as I walked to the door where I had told Anna I would come out. She had written me the kind of car she would be in, and the side of the street where it would be parked, and luck was with me. I found it almost at once, and in another two minutes we were around the corner from the hotel.

"I knew I was safe for two hours for I'd pleaded a headache and asked not to be called for luncheon, and there was no engagement for me until later in the afternoon when I was to do some last minute shopping with my mother. And long before the two hours was up I was in the office of Henry's surgeon friend. He put bandages on my face and head as if I'd been in an accident and took me to a small hospital where he was nearly enough the whole thing so that nobody questioned anything he did. Those bandages which effectually altered my appearance were changed only by himself during the time I was there—about ten days. Two days after I came, he "bobbed" my nose, and when I left the hospital and went with Henry and Anna to the hotel I was so bandaged that my own mother wouldn't have known me. Henry explained that I had been in an automobile accident, and so even if the detectives had come to the hotel there would have been no danger, for as I told you, Henry had told them weeks before that he was expecting his 'niece.'"

"Detectives!" I echoed, startled. "Was there a police hunt for you? How did they keep it out of the newspapers?"

"There was no police hunt," she replied. "My mother would not have had any one dream I'd run away for half the kingdom. The King of Trees would have no wife with such a scandal about her. But of course there were plenty of private detectives trying to trace me. I left a note for my mother in my jewel box saying that I was safe, and would be careful to do nothing which would reflect any descredit upon her, but that I never would come back to Transvania until I was given a solemn oath that I would not have to marry Albert. I told her that every three months on the fifteenth, I would look in the personal columns of the New York papers, and that if she wrote, 'Lina, I give you my word, Maman,' I would write to her at once where I was. She's put in messages twice, but they weren't the one I had directed, so I paid no attention to them. Then she asked Georges to come over—I fancy he was coming anyway"—she interpolated with a blush—"but he won't give me away until I get my promise from my mother."

I spent a startled second or two analyzing that involuntary flush at her reference to the journey which young Prince Georges of Trees, had made in search of her. She carefully had avoided stressing that part of her story which told of the stay of the young prince at the Transvanian court, but I strongly suspected that there had been an impassioned glamorous interlude to the stately court processional which had gone deeper with them than either had suspected. Though they were infected by freedom from the restraint of courts, and the novelty of American ideas and customs, though Georges was wooing Mary Harrison ardently, and Olina was equally impetuous in her siege of Noel's heart, I had an odd conviction that these emotions were but the frothing waves of a mill race, and that underneath ran the steady current of their affection for each other.

I knew very well, however, that neither of them would credit such an assertion for a second, and realizing that Princess Olina was looking at me oddly, I broke my involuntary moment of introspection with a hurried awkward question.

"Do you think your mother will send you that word soon?"

"I don't know," she answered, "but it doesn't matter now. If Mr. Veritzen gives me the chance on the stage he's promised me, and if I can manage something which is—terrifying—me. I'll stay here in America the rest of my life."

Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl in my early teens. I have been going with a boy a few years my senior. I know he liked me very much, but lately he has been going with another girl. Please advise me what to do.

WONDERING.

WONDERING: I do not see that you have any cause to be so concerned because this boy is going with another girl also. Since you are not engaged you cannot expect that he will restrict his friendship to you alone and I advise you to curb your jealous tendencies and be content with this boy's interest. It is your privilege also to have other friends and you would do well to enlarge your circle of acquaintances and cease to be un-duly concerned about one.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl in my teens. Every time I speak to a fellow, I begin to blush. Could you tell me the cause of this? I know it looks ridiculous to blush at anything they say. What can I do to stop it?

BLUSHING ROSE.

BLUSHING ROSE: This is probably due to your self-consciousness, my dear, and you can force yourself out of this annoying habit by cultivating a manner of poise and assurance. Stop being aware of the fact that you do flush and after you have gone out a bit more and acquired more ease in the presence of boys, I am sure you will no longer be bothered by this.

Do Exercising Cheerfully

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

YOU can't be lazy and be beautiful at the same time! For being lazy, delightful as it is for a time, soon brings starvant blood, fat, flabby muscles, inertia and a general no-goodness that broods evil for all who want to assimilate with sparkling beauty.

It's a mean hard fact to face, but then all facts have hard faces, so we might as well face them hardily. By this time you probably suspect that I'm leading up to something unpleasant. You're right, I am. I always feel quite conscience smitten when I am about to offer a suggestion that means hard work, because I don't like hard work any better than you do, yet I realize from experiments and lengthy researches I've made that the only heartease for the woman who wants to be beautiful is the certain knowledge that she can be if she will the strength to make a business of doing the hard work necessary.

When I say stamina I don't mean only the grit to do the thing, but the co-ordination and necessary to do the job cheerfully. Exercises won't do much good if they are applied with a resisting mood. [illegible] to sing a [illegible] "goody, goody, goody, I'm going to do my exercises," and further than that you've GOT TO FEEL GOOD about doing them if they in turn are to do good for you.

Our mental attitude toward beauty has so much to do with attaining beauty that without a real, keen interest and joy in the task the results are bound to be dubious. Faith in and happiness over the particular beauty routine of the moment is the best assurance of success. And, now that we've put that over, tune in on a pleasant frame of mind—gather all your faith for the particular exercise I'm going to give you and begin.

Stand erect, head up, shoulders back, chest raised, heels about three inches apart, toes pointing straight ahead, arms hanging relaxed at the sides. Now raise the right leg until it is horizontal with the hip, keeping the knee rigid all the time. When the leg is raised as high as possible (which won't be for the first few times you try it), lower the leg to the floor and raise the left leg in the same manner. Repeat twenty times, alternating in the same manner.

The exercise finally reddled and relaxed lips.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

She Describes a Dancing Frock of Black Net Over Satin.

MRS. CAMBRIDGE came in yesterday looking for a black dancing frock. She looked at several bouffante models and then decided that her evening wrap would not do with them—it was too long and tight and would have provided a rather grotesque outline.

So many people do not realize that a period dress calls for a wrap distinctly suited to it. Lovers of the bouffante style realize that shorter full wraps, close at the shoulder and full over the dress fullness, are best.

It was rather hard finding just the type of dress that Mrs. Cambridge wanted. Most black gowns are made in the bouffante style or in the ultra-sophisticated manner the fluffy dance style is more generally confined to the lighter shades.

"No, that's not what I'd like," she said, after I had modeled several black dresses. "I don't want a dinner gown—I want something that looks dancey, but is made in black. I'm so tired of pastel shades and brilliant hues."

I could understand her point. There are many who favor a [illegible] color for some time—often stressing it in all varieties of modes—and then tire of it so completely that they feel they must dash right out and buy its exact opposite. I have revolted in this way countless times.

It isn't too often that customers come in with minds made up as to exactly what they want and get it, but Mrs. Cambridge was [illegible] the next dress I modeled was, as she said, just what she had in mind.

Conservative Black Fashioned Into an Elaborate Dance Frock.

It had a black satin foundation with bolero and flare skirt of net in [illegible] with the [illegible] [illegible] brightness and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Joy of Living One Sure Indication of Abounding Health

Just Be Yourself and Personality Will Result

By DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

EVERYWHERE you go you find people acting a part. One sees it in the drawing room, in the street cars, in the subways, on the street.

DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

Very few of us are free from artificialities of manner.

Apparently one of the most difficult things to do is to behave naturally.

Seldom, really, do you meet a person who impresses you as thoroughly genuine — who really acts himself as he really is.

In short, all of us are actors at heart!

On the face of it, it ought to be the easiest thing imaginable to conduct yourself in accordance with what you innately are. Trying to be something else, something that is foreign to your nature, by comparison ought to be extremely difficult. Yet somehow we tend to choose the harder course. Why?

The reason we set up artificial standards of conduct for ourselves is because we are gregarious.

We like to associate with large groups—act as the group acts—think like the group. Living alone and thinking independently does not appeal. This natural crowd instinct goes away back to remote days. It was a time that has been called the "herding stage" of civilization.

Then it was that the property of the various tribes and clans consisted of domestic animals, herded together and protected together for purposes of safety.

And just as the animals could better be taken care of in herds, so the people found that they could best take care of themselves when living in groups.

Expression of individuality received a setback. Individuality had to be suppressed for the common good. It was a question of "give and take."

Only those possessing unusual powers of individuality broke through and dominated the others. These exceptional ones became the leaders. The rest followed their lead. It is the same today. We tend to be followers instead of leaders. We behave in accordance with what we think the group standard dictates.

And so, in consequence, our actions are largely artificial. We pretend and make believe because we think that is the way other poeple would like to have us conduct ourselves.

But why be camp followers? The world needs leaders!

Stop acting! Be yourself! Show what you really are!

Practice being yourself. Act as though you don't care what people may think. Don't wonder about them.

Let your own naturalness be your chief concern.

It doesn't really take long to impress people if you are perfectly natural.

Waiting for Their Ship

By Fanny Darrell.

© 1928, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc., Great Britain rights reserved.

"WAIT until our ship comes in, beloved, and then you'll have all the wonderful things in the world. Priceless jewels from the tombs of kings; the finest silks from India; the perfumes of Araby; all the riches of the world shall be poured into your little hands. Persia shall send her finest carpets for your little feet to tread upon; tapestries, paintings, beauties from every land shall be given to you that your lovely eyes may feast ever on beauty. But best of all, the load of love that the ship is bringing to you and to me, shall be ever with us to lighten and brighten our days. And even if the cargo isn't as rich as we think, still there's the love left, and who can deny that this is the greatest of all gifts, my dearest one? Your love for me, and mine for you! So what matter if there be nothing but you and me and a wee home full of love and happiness. For that's all the riches of the world in one and material things fade before the richness of its beauty."

IF YOU'RE GROUCHY YOU'RE NOT WELL

Why Not Trace Ill-Temper to Its Source and Cure It as You Would Some More Obvious Malady?

By DR. ROYAL S COPELAND, M.
United States Senator from New York,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

LAMARTINE said, "Joyousness in nature's garb of health."

This is, indeed, a solemn truth. When perfect health of body exists you are likely to find associated with it sweetness of spirit and joyousness of mind.

A cross child is almost always a tired or sick child. A peevish, irritable, ugly man is likely to be a worn-out or sick man. Joyousness on the contrary is an evidence of health.

Anger, especially uncontrolled anger, is bad for the health. Almost as quickly as anything can do it, anger will derange the digestion, produce a headache and give you a feeling of real illness.

Mind and body are so intimately related that it is hard to tell which comes first—a sick body or a disturbed mind. If there are abounding health and perfect digestion, it is very certain the mind will be at rest and laughter will be near the surface.

Likewise, if the mind is at peace, the functions of the body are carried on with little disturbance. Fear, remorse, hatred, anger—these will disturb the whole body.

I have no doubt we need the trials and unpleasant experiences of life to develop character. But it would be a wonderful world, for a time anyhow, if weather were perfect, business good and life going by like a song. Joyousness would reign supreme.

I wonder if we would tire of such an existence? Personally, I love the seasons, but there is no doubt that the even climate of a State like California is wonderfully appealing.

But when Lamartine talked about "joyousness," it is not probable that he had giggling idiocy in mind. He referred, I assume, to that lightness of spirit that accompanies duty well done, every task honestly attended to, and a full day's work accomplished.

There is a joyousness in doing every task as well as you know how. Such an attitude of mind rests the tired muscles, takes the kinks out and in every way lightens the burdens of life.

It makes no difference which comes first—health or joyousness—does it? But who can doubt that they are twin sisters—peace of mind and soundness of body?

When I meet a grouchy, ill-tempered, ugly man, I want to look at his teeth and tonsils, to inquire into his eating habits and to find out if his elimination is normal. Nine times out of ten you will find that such a man has something wrong with his physical system.

But when a whistling boy comes tearing down the street, a broad grin on his face, you can wager that he is in vigorous health. Joyousness is nature's garb of health.

Cultivate cheerfulness, but guarantee it by having a vigorous, normal body.

"Do you think your mother will send you that word soon?"

"I don't know," she answered, "but it doesn't matter now. If Mr. Veritzen gives me the chance on the stage he's promised me, and if I can manage something which is—terrifying—me, I'll stay here in America the rest of my life."

Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:
I am a girl in my early teens. I have been going with a boy a few years my senior. I know he liked me very much, but lately he has been going with another girl. Please advise me what to do.
WONDERING.

WONDERING: I do not see that you have any cause to be so concerned because this boy is going with another girl also. Since you are not engaged you cannot expect that he will restrict his friendship to you alone and I advise you to curb your jealous tendencies and be content with this boy's interest. It is your privilege also to have other friends and you would do well to enlarge your circle of acquaintances and cease to be unduly concerned about one.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:
I am a girl in my teens. Every time I speak to a fellow, I begin to blush. Could you tell me the cause of this? I know it looks ridiculous to blush at anything they say. What can I do to stop it?
BLUSHING ROSE.

BLUSHING ROSE: This is probably due to your self-consciousness, my dear, and you can force yourself out of this annoying habit by cultivating a manner of poise and assurance. Stop being aware of the fact that you do blush and after you have gone out a bit more and acquired more ease in the presence of boys, I am sure you will no longer be bothered by this.

Famous Composers

By COZETTE DOUGLASS

WITH his earliest inclinations toward a musical career fostered amid congenial and sympathetic surroundings, Ignaz Moscheles fulfilled in later life his father's ambition that one of his sons should "become a thoroughbred musician."

Ignaz Moscheles was born in Prague, on May 30, 1794. He studied at the Conservatorium under Dionys Weber and at the age of fourteen made his first public appearance, playing a concerto of his own composition.

On the death of his parents Moscheles moved to Vienna, and by the advice of Beethoven and Haydn, pursued his musical studies under Albrechtsberger and Salieri, at the same time entering on a successful career as teacher and virtuoso.

With such high regard and confidence did the great masters hold Moscheles that in 1814 Beethoven commissioned him to prepare the pianoforte arrangement of "Fidelio." The next year Moscheles published his celebrated "Variationen uber den Alexandermarsch," a concert piece of such difficulty that on his performance of it in public he was immediately hailed as the most brilliant performer of the day.

Shortly after this Moscheles entered upon a tour of the European capitals, a tour which was crowned with great success. In 1822 he made his first appearance in London, and there met and became friendly with Muzio Clementi and John Cramer. For a concert given by Cramer, Moscheles wrote for him his famous "Hommage a Handel."

During a visit to Berlin, he met Mendelssohn, then a boy of fifteen, and a lasting friendship was formed between the two great men, which was broken only by Mendelssohn's early death.

In 1826 Moscheles settled permanently in London, after his marriage to Charlotte Embden in Hamburg. In 1829 he introduced Mendelssohn to London musical circles, and in 183z he was appointed Director of the Philharmonic Society, and later conductor, which post he held until 1847. In that year he was persuaded by Mendelssohn to accept the position of assistant at the Conservatory in Leipzig, which Mendelssohn had founded. On the death of Mendelssohn, Moscheles succeeded him as Director, which position he retained until his death.

Moscheles died in Leipsig on March 10, 1870.

Do Exercising Cheerfully

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

YOU can't be lazy and be beautiful at the same time! For being lazy, delightful as it is for a time, soon brings stagnant blood, fat, flabby muscles, inertia and a general no-goodness that broods evil for all who want to scintillate with sparkling beauty.

It's a mean hard fact to face, but then all facts have hard faces, so we might as well face them hardily. By this time you probably suspect that I'm leading up to something unpleasant. You're right, I am. I always feel quite conscience smitten when I am about to offer a suggestion that means hard work, because I don't like hard work any better than you do; yet I realize from experiments and lengthy researches I've made that the only heart-ease for the woman who wants to be beautiful is the certain knowledge that she can be if she has the stamina to make a business of doing the hard work necessary.

When I say stamina I don't mean only the grit to do the thing, but the super-human grit necessary to do the job cheerfully. Exercises won't do much good if they are approached with a resisting mood. You've got to sing a little song of "goody, goody, goody, I'm going to do my exercises," and further than that you've GOT TO FEEL GOOD about doing them if they in turn are to do good for you.

Our mental attitude toward beauty has so much to do with attaining beauty that without a real, keen interest and joy in the task the results are bound to be dubious. Faith in and happiness over the particular beauty routine of the moment is the best assurance of success. And, now that we've put that over, tune in on a pleasant frame of mind—gather all your faith for the particular exercise I'm going to give you and begin.

Stand erect, head up, shoulders back, chest raised, heels about three inches apart, toes pointing straight ahead, arms hanging relaxed at the sides. Now raise the right leg until it is horizontal with the hip, keeping the knees rigid all the time. When the leg is raised as nigh as possible (which won't be far the first few times you try it), lower the leg to the floor and raise the left leg in the same manner. Repeat twenty times, alternating in the same manner.

The reward? Nicely rounded and reduced hips!

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

She Describes a Dancing Frock of Black Net Over Satin.

MRS. CAMBRIDGE came in yesterday looking for a black dancing frock. She looked at several bouffante models and then decided that her evening wrap would not do with them—it was too long and tight and would have provided a rather grotesque outline.

So many people do not realize that a period dress calls for a wrap distinctly suited to it. Lovers of the bouffante style realize that shorter full wraps, close at the shoulder and full over the dress fullness, are best.

It was rather hard finding just the type of dress that Mrs. Cambridge wanted. Most black gowns are made in the bouffante style or in the ultra-sophisticated manner; the fluffy dance style is more generally confined to the lighter shades.

"No, that's not what I'd like," she said, after I had modeled several black dresses. "I don't want a dinner gown—I want something that looks dance-y, but is made in black. I'm so tired of pastel shades and brilliant hues."

I could understand her revolt. There are many who favor a becoming color for some time—often stressing it in all varieties of modes—and then tire of it so completely that they feel they must dash right out and buy its exact opposite. I have revolted in this way countless times.

It isn't too often that customers come in with minds made up as to exactly what they want and get it, but Mrs. Cambridge was lucky, for the next dress I modeled was, she said, just what she had in mind.

It had a black satin foundation, with bolero and flare skirt of black net embroidered with rows of silver thread. The silvered net gave it the brightness and softness of a dance frock, and it was further brightened by strands of strass at hips and decolletage.

Mrs. Cambridge planned to wear it with the currently popular sheer sunburned hose and silver-heeled black satin slippers. A double-strand of crystal would complete the costume.

AFTER APPOMATTOX

ON April 9, 1865, a silver-haired, courtly gentleman in a gray uniform sat in a country courthouse at Appomattox, Va., facing a grim-jawed man in blue, and surrendered to him the gallant army with which, for four years, he had made history.

The surrender was complete. The soldiers were to lay down their arms and disband. All artillery and munitions were to be given up. The cause was lost forever. The letters "C. S. A." on the buttons of the gray-clad officer now meant only a memory and not an independent nation. When Robert E. Lee put his signature on the articles of surrender he knew that his defeat was complete.

On April 9 next, 63 years after that surrender, a gigantic stone figure will be unveiled at Stone Mountain, Ga. It is to be a gigantic memorial to the man who was beaten; an heroic stone monument to the defeated leader of a lost cause.

What is the meaning of this word "defeated" anyway? What do we mean when we say Lee was defeated? Why do we build a memorial to the man who surrendered to the federal government 63 years ago?

There are various kinds of defeat. There is the kind Wilhelm of Germany suffered, followed by ignominious flight over the border; and there is the kind that leaves the defeated man a hero. Lee's defeat was of the latter kind. Appomattox brought to an end his military career. But Lee himself was a kind of victor on that occasion. Appomattox did not dim his fame. It did not prevent the entire country, north and south, from enshrining him as a hero afterward.

For true greatness can never be really beaten. And Lee was not only great in a military sense; he had that inward serenity and loftiness that set their possessor apart from ordinary men, and make him an influence for good long after he has passed on. Lee stands today with his fame more secure than ever before, a constant inspiration to the men of his country.

We cannot do without our heroes. We must have our tradition of great men. Lee takes his place in America's roll of honor; we feel that we are better men, and a better country, because he lived. The Stone Mountain memorial is, in a way, our public avowal of that fact.

Lee was beaten on the field of war. Yet he was victor in the broader, deeper sense. Life could not overcome him. He faced it squarely and bravely, and came out forever triumphant, leaving a name like a blazing star to shine down the path of our history.

MILLIONS ARE STUDYING

THE extent to which the American people are studying the world's wisdom is suggested by the enrollment at some of the bigger colleges. Columbia university, for in the year of 36,639 persons, including under graduates, professional school students, summer schools and university extension courses.

The total number of students of all kinds of courses above high school grade in the country is something enormous, and it must run into the millions.

Young people are going to feel poorly equipped for life, if they do not know more than their parents did. Every young person of ambition ought to be looking out for his future needs, and most of them ought to be studying something along some line of self improvement.

The one sure way to make a good citizen of a criminal is to begin with his grandfather.—Canton, O., Repository.

The RAMBLER

By NORMAN W. RALSTON

WHEN IT RAINS

SOME people
When it rains,
I've found,
Just toss
Their spirits
On the ground,
And they're
Content
To sit inside
And act as though
Their soul
Had died,
They groan around
And curse the
Day
As though they'd
Really lost the fray;
I cannot see
The sense
Of this
When really there's
So much of bliss
If we'll but
Look around, we'll
Find
That Fate is really
Not unkind;
Here is a man who's
Lost an eye
And here's another
Just to die
And yet with faded,
Smiling face
They greet you as
They take their
Place,
And there are thousands
Others, too,
Who are worse off,
I know, than you,
So when it rains
Just smile
Inside—
That man's a failure
Who just cried—

And what we mean to say
Is,
So soon we lose our
Childhood joy
That we once owned
As girl or boy;
So soon we feel that
Life's a bore
And that for us
There's naught in store;
But when it rains
We are not done
For when it stops
Will come the
Sun.

REV. S. W. HILES' SERMON

Sermon preached Sunday evening in U. B. Church by pastor, Rev. S. W. Hiles.

Subject — "Jesus Weeping Over Circleville." Text — Luke 19:44 — "And when he was come near, He beheld the city and wept over it."

Jerusalem, the blessed city in the favor of God, became unfaithful, was not true. Jesus saw it at this time and wept because Jerusalem was to have another chance when He came, but He knew now that the city rejected him. Altho it was the blessed city, the city of God, this did no save it from its doom.

Our nation is a favored nation, our cities, our own little city, has been blessed of God. Are we ready to learn the lesson of Jerusalem? Was it spared? Jerusalem was not all wicked, there were good people in it who worshiped God and the promised One. What does Jesus see in Circleville?

1st. The Churches of Circleville, dedicated to God to bring men into a saving relationship with Him, and make better men, better citizens, first to God and then to the city.

2nd. The Schools of Circleville. The public school is a product of the Christian Church. The Bible stands, the proven Word of God.

It's business first of all, is to instil the worth of Christian character, to make men real men and women.

Our government is the best in the world—our civil courts, our justice.

Is Jesus saying tonight, "Oh, Circleville, dost thou know the day of thy visitation?

There are 10 or 12 churches here, but where are the worshipers? Jesus would weep over the carelessness, the ungodliness, the indifference, not only of the outsiders, but those of his own fold. If the churches of Circleville were what they ought to be, we would not have the lawlessness, the bootlegging, the unholiness in our midst.

Sabbath desecration, oh, how prevalent today. Public dancing. Sunday movies, pleasures of all kinds. Circleville has its share of sin and ungodliness, its share of worldliness in its churches. Sin is not a favorable topic to talk about today. Society at large is not interested in sin. When it breaks out into crime, murder, into the newspapers, then it becomes interested.

Preachers need to preach full gospel of Christ, calling men to repentance, to a better life.

If the churches are failing in this, then Jesus is weeping. There are earnest men and women here though in every church, but also, there are the organized forces of evil on every side. Jesus sees here, gambling, conditions of sin in many places in our city, hypocricy of life. Jesus weeps over Circleville. Are the eyes of Circleville holden?

Men and women are living in disregard of the blood of Christ. Oh, the indifference, the indifference to religious ideals. Have you ever wept over the conditions in Circleville? What Circleville needs tonight is a sin-killing, soul-saving, God-honoring, God-given, Holy Ghost revival. Jesus tried to remedy the condition. He went into the temple and cleansed it. If Jesus were here he would drive out the ones who are feeding the flock upon world things, sullying the deep things of God.

Youth is blamed too much today. If there is flaming youth, then there is flaring middle age. Youth goes to the dance hall on the Sabbath. Did he build it or does he finance it? No, some middle aged one is profiteering.

The Sunday movies are a menace. Do boys and girls run them? Maybe some church member does.

Jesus is not weeping so much over the young, as over the older ones. "Ye did not know the day of your visitation."

If the forces of evil are at work how much more should the forces of the church. This is enough to make Jesus weep over Circleville as over Jerusalem, oh, are you doing your part?

Oh, if our churches were filled tonight with earnest, consecrated men and women, making them better fitted for the week's work, to go out to do more work for Him, to live solely for Him, I think Jesus would be pleased, would be happy. Will you do your part? Let's make Jesus real in Circleville.—Amen.

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Because Jakie, son of Cantor Rabinowitz, prefers jazz to Synagogue music, he leaves home. Ten years elapse. Through Mary Dale, a dancer, Jakie, now Jack Robin, becomes a musical comedy jazz singer. The Cantor, discovering his son's profession, disowns him. Jack's show opens the Eve of Yom Kippur. Dillings, the backer of the show, jealous of Mary's love for Jack, withdraws his money, leaving Lee, the producer, dependent on Jack for success. The Cantor is ill and Yudelson, his friend, begs Jack to sing in the Synagogue that night. Torn between his desires Jack talks to Mary. Then his mother arrives at the theatre.

"Mama!" he cried, clasping her hands, and leaning forward to kiss her. But he remembered his makeup and stepped back, pulling her into the dressing room with him.

"Jakie! This ain't you!" Mrs. Rabinowitz was holding the boy at arms' length inspecting him in a puzzled manner.

Yudelson, in his turn, was almost as bewildered as Mrs. Rabinowitz. He stared at Jack uncertainly, and shook his head.

"It talks like Jakie, but it looks like a nigger!" he exclaimed finally.

"Yudelson, didn't you explain to my mama?" Jack turned to the jeweler, his face drawn in an agony of despair.

"O, my son, my heart is breaking in pieces!"

"Sure, I told her everything, the same way you told me Jakie, but she made me I should bring her here." Yudelson looked a little timorously at Jack, uncertain as to whether he had done the right thing. But Mrs. Rabinowitz was waving his words aside.

"Jakie, I got to tell you from your papa," she spoke in low, monotonous tones that sounded almost like a wailing chant. "Jakie, your papa is sick. He is laying in bed. His face is so white—" she was swaying, almost falling. Jack caught her arm.

"Please, Mama," he pulled a chair nearer and gently pushed her into it. "Sit down, Mama, sit down." He placed a chair opposite her and sank into it, his breath coming fast and hard. He had completely forgotten Mary, who moved unobtrusively to a corner in the room where she could watch Jack's face.

"Your papa is sick, Jakie. All the time he is talking about you," Mrs. Rabinowitz continued in the same monotones, scarcely seeing the boy with the black face and the ungainly red mouth who sat in front of her. "His eyes is open like a baby's eyes. His face is white like a yahrzeit candle. All the time he talks from his son. He was saying this day, 'Sara,' he said—his voice was so low I could hardly hear him—he said, 'maybe Jakie will come tonight and sing in the Synagogue.'"

"Did he really say that, Mama?" Jack leaned forward, strangely touched by his mother's message. His father wanted him to come back—to come back and sing in the Synagogue. He had forgiven him, perhaps; had forgotten the grudge he bore against his son.

"He said it—the way I'm setting here this minute, he said it." Mrs. Rabinowitz repeated dully in the same singsong tones. "For five generations God always heard a Rabinowitz sing every Day of Atonement, every holy day, every Sabbath. God is used to it now." She looked up sorrowfully, her eyes pleading pathetically. "Jakie, your papa is dying, maybe God will ask him, 'Is Jakie singing in the Synagogue tonight?' How can he say, 'No, he is singing in the theayter!'" She paused, staring straight ahead.

A slight moan escaped Jack's lips. He shook his head miserably, while Mary, from her corner, was viewing with consternation the effect of this visit on Jack. She couldn't help but feel sorry for the dejected woman who sat there so mournfully, her shawled shoulders sagging, her worn face so pitiful in her adversity. And yet—this was Jack's night of nights; the night that might make or mar the remainder of his theatrical career, and even his life. She turned away, sick at heart.

"You should come and sing, Jakie," Yudelson was urging from his place by the dressing table. "If you don't there is only Levy, the shamus, to sing—with a voice like a frog," he added in disgust.

"Oh, my son, mein zin, my heart is breaking in pieces." Mrs. Rabinowitz rocked back and forth, swaying, speaking like some uncanny automaton. "You got two hours before the sun goes out of the sky and it gets dark. Come with me home, Jakie."

"Mama, I can't! I can't do it!" Jack cried. "Can't you understand, Mama? This is my big chance tonight—the chance of my whole life. I've worked years for this. I want to make good. They're all banking on me. Mr Lee—everybody—they've given me this one chance to make good. I've got to go on. If I come home now, Mama, don't you see it will be the end of everything for me? I can't give it up now. Please don't ask me to, Mama!"

But it was like addressing a plea to some unseeing, unbending goddess. Mrs. Rabinowitz scarcely heard the boy's words; she did not even understand what he meant. So much had happened—so many things to worry over—such great sorrow had been hers during the past two weeks that it had left her cold and numb. She knew only one thing—felt only one thing. Jakie must come home and sing in the Synagogue that night for the sake of his father. She had to make him come somehow. It didn't matter how, so long as he returned. She must not go back alone.

"You can't come?" Her voice was strained and coldly intense in its repetitional rhythm. "You can't come? How can you say this to me, your mama? When you was a little boy we was so poor. I worked so hard all the time for you. I slaved my fingers to the bone that there should be money to buy you nice things. My fingers, they used to bleed. Look at my hands, Jakie; it is still there the marks." She held out her rough, work-worn hands, exposing the knotted joints and the knobby fingers with the little black cuts interwoven like net work around the broken nails.

Jack bent over swiftly and took the hands with the blue veins standing out on them like bas-relief. He patted them tenderly. "I know, Mama, I know," he whispered hoarsely, the tears starting to his eyes.

A knock sounded at the door. Gene thrust his head into the room. "Your specialty'll be on in a minute, Mr. Robin," he announced, looking curiously over the little gathering that seemed to create an air of tense drama in that tiny room.

"All right, Gene." Jack rose wearily, his mother's hands still in his. "Mama," he turned to the figure on the chair, "I haven't time to tell you—I've got to go on. But you must try to understand, Mama. I'll explain it to you—just a little while. Yudelson—Mary," he turned for the first time since his mother's entrance to the girl. "Mary, tell my mother—"

"Wait, Jack, I'll go out and see if I can't get them to hold it for you for a few minutes." She flashed through the room like a flaming meteor, so bright and sparkling she seemed in the dull drabness that had fallen on the room. She patted Jack's arm and smiled up at him, the briefest sort of smile, as she sped out the door and into the wings.

"And, Jakie, more your papa said," Mrs. Rabinowitz continued in that same uncanny voice that sounded so strange and unnatural. "Your papa said, 'Ask Jakie he should forgive me. He is doing things from sin, but he don't mean it. In his heart he is a Rabinowitz.' Jakie, the way I'm setting here this minute, before God I swear it—that is what he said." She rose to her feet. Even the oath did not unsettle this supernatural calm that had settled like a cloud over the woman who must have her son back at any cost.

"I know, Mama! I believe you!" Jack's voice was near to breaking. "I believe you."

"We're waiting for you, Mr Robin." Gene appeared in the doorway, his temper slightly ruffled. "We can't hold it any longer."

AFTER APPOMATTOX

ON April 9, 1865, a silver-haired, courtly gentleman in a gray uniform sat in a country courthouse at Appomattox, Va., facing a grim-jawed man in blue, and surrendered to him the gallant army with which, for four years, he had made history.

The surrender was complete. The soldiers were to lay down their arms and disband. All artillery and munitions were to be given up. The cause was lost forever. The letters "C. S. A." on the buttons of the gray-clad officer now meant only a memory and not an independent nation. When Robert E. Lee put his signature on the articles of surrender he knew that his defeat was complete.

On April 9 next, 63 years after that surrender, a gigantic stone figure will be unveiled at Stone Mountain, Ga. It is to be a gigantic memorial to the man who was beaten; an heroic stone monument to the defeated leader of a lost cause.

What is the meaning of this word "defeated" anyway? What do we mean when we say Lee was defeated? Why do we build a memorial to the man who surrendered to the federal government 63 years ago?

There are various kinds of defeat. There is the kind Wilhelm of Germany suffered, followed by ignominious flight over the border; and there is the kind that leaves the defeated man a hero. Lee's defeat was of the latter kind. Appomattox brought to an end his military career. But Lee himself was a kind of victor on that occasion. Appomattox did not dim his fame. It did not prevent the entire country, north and south, from enshrining him as a hero afterward.

For true greatness can never be really beaten. And Lee was not only great in a military sense; he had that inward serenity and loftiness that set their possessor apart from ordinary men, and make him an influence for good long after he has passed on. Lee stands today with his fame more secure than ever before, a constant inspiration to the men of his country.

We cannot do without our heroes. We must have our tradition of great men. Lee takes his place in America's roll of honor; we feel that we are better men, and a better country, because he lived. The Stone Mountain memorial is, in a way, our public avowal of that fact.

Lee was beaten on the field of war. Yet he was victor in the broader, deeper sense. Life could not overcome him. He faced it squarely and bravely, and came out forever triumphant, leaving a name like a blazing star to shine down the path of our history.

MILLIONS ARE STUDYING

THE extent to which the American people are studying the world's wisdom is suggested by the enrollment at some of the bigger colleges. Columbia university, for in the year of 36,639 persons, including under graduates, professional school students, summer schools and university extension courses.

The total number of students of all kinds of courses above high school grade in the country is something enormous, and it must run into the millions.

Young people are going to feel poorly equipped for life, if they do not know more than their parents did. Every young person of ambition ought to be looking out for his future needs, and most of them ought to be studying something along some line of self improvement.

WHEN IT RAINS

SOME people
When it rains,
I've found,
Just toss
Their spirits
On the ground,
And they're
Content
To sit inside
And act as though
Their soul
Had died,
They groan around
And curse the
Day
As though they'd
Really lost the fray;
I cannot see
The sense
Of this
When really there's
So much of bliss
If we'll but
Look around, we'll
Find
That Fate is really
Not unkind;
Here is a man who's
Lost an eye
And here's another
Just to die
And yet with faded,
Smiling face
They greet you as
They take their
Place,
And there are thousands
Others, too,
Who are worse off,
I know, than you,
So when it rains
Just smile
Inside—
That man's a failure
Who just cried—

And what we mean to say
Is,
So soon we lose our
Childhood joy
That we once owned
As girl or boy;
So soon we feel that
Life's a bore
And that for us
There's naught in store;
But when it rains
We are not done
For when it stops
Will come the
Sun.

REV. S. W. HILES' SERMON

Sermon preached Sunday evening in U. B. Church by pastor, Rev. S. W. Hiles.

Subject — "Jesus Weeping Over Circleville." Text — Luke 19:44 — "And when he was come near, He beheld the city and wept over it."

Jerusalem, the blessed city in the favor of God, became unfaithful, was not true. Jesus saw it at this time and wept because Jerusalem was to have another chance when He came, but He knew now that the city rejected him. Altho it was the blessed city, the city of God, this did no save it from its doom.

Our nation is a favored nation, our cities, our own little city, has been blessed of God. Are we ready to learn the lesson of Jerusalem? Was it spared? Jerusalem was not all wicked, there were good people in it who worshiped God and the promised One. What does Jesus see in Circleville?

1st. The Churches of Circleville, dedicated to God to bring men into a saving relationship with Him, and make better men, better citizens, first to God and then to the city.

2nd. The Schools of Circleville. The public school is a product of the Christian Church. The Bible stands, the proven Word of God.

It's business first of all, is to instil the worth of Christian character, to make men real men and women.

Our government is the best in the world—our civil courts, our justice.

Is Jesus saying tonight, "Oh, Circleville, dost thou know the day of thy visitation?

There are 10 or 12 churches here, but where are the worshipers? Jesus would weep over the carelessness, the ungodliness, the indifference, not only of the outsiders, but those of his own fold. If the churches of Circleville were what they ought to be, we would not have the lawlessness, the bootlegging, the unholiness in our midst.

Sabbath desecration, oh, how prevalent today. Public dancing, Sunday movies, pleasures of all kinds. Circleville has its share of sin and ungodliness, its share of worldliness in its churches. Sin is not a favorable topic to talk about today. Society at large is not interested in sin. When it breaks out into crime, murder, into the newspapers, then it becomes interested.

Preachers need to preach full gospel of Christ, calling men to repentance, to a better life.

If the churches are failing in his, then Jesus is weeping. There are earnest men and women here though in every church, but also, there are the organized forces of evil on every side. Jesus sees here, gambling, conditions of sin in many places in our city, hypocricy of life. Jesus weeps over Circleville. Are the eyes of Circleville holden?

Men and women are living in disregard of the blood of Christ. Oh, the indifference, the indifference to religious ideals. Have you ever wept over the conditions in Circlville? What Circleville needs tonight is a sin-killing, soul-saving, God-honoring, God-given, Holy Ghost revival. Jesus tried to remedy the condition. He went into the temple and cleansed it. If Jesus were here he would drive out the ones who are feeding the flock upon world things, sullying the deep things of God.

Youth is blamed too much today. If there is flaming youth, then there is flaring middle age. Youth goes to the dance hall on the Sabbath. Did he build it or does he finance it? No, some middle aged one is profiteering.

The Sunday movies are a menace. Do boys and girls run them? Maybe some church member does.

Jesus is not weeping so much over the young, as over the older ones. "Ye did not know the day of your visitation."

If the forces of evil are at work how much more should the forces of the church. This is enough to make Jesus weep over Circleville as over Jerusalem, oh, are you doing your part?

Oh, if our churches were filled tonight with earnest, consecrated men and women, making them better fitted for the week's work, to go out to do more work for Him, to live solely for Him, I think Jesus would be pleased, would be happy. Will you do your part? Let's make Jesus real in Circleville.—Amen.

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Because Jakie, son of Cantor Rabinowitz, prefers jazz to Synagogue music, he leaves home. Ten years elapse. Through Mary Dale, a dancer, Jakie, now Jack Robin, becomes a musical comedy jazz singer. The Cantor, discovering his son's profession, disowns him. Jack's show opens the Eve of Yom Kippur. Dillings, the backer of the show, jealous of Mary's love for Jack, withdraws his money, leaving Lee, the producer, dependent on Jack for success. The Cantor is ill and Yudelson, his friend, begs Jack to sing in the Synagogue that night. Torn between his desires Jack talks to Mary. Then his mother arrives at the theatre.

"Mama!" he cried, clasping her hands, and leaning forward to kiss her. But he remembered his make-up and stepped back, pulling her into the dressing room with him.

"Jakie! This ain't you!" Mrs. Rabinowitz was holding the boy at arms' length inspecting him in a puzzled manner.

Yudelson, in his turn, was almost as bewildered as Mrs. Rabinowitz. He stared at Jack uncertainly, and shook his head.

"It talks like Jakie, but it looks like a nigger!" he exclaimed finally.

"Yudelson, didn't you explain to my mama?" Jack turned to the jeweler, his face drawn in an agony of despair.

"Sure, I told her everything, the same way you told me Jakie, but she made me I should bring her here," Yudelson looked a little timorously at Jack, uncertain as to whether he had done the right thing. But Mrs. Rabinowitz was waving his words aside.

"Jakie, I got to tell you from your papa," she spoke in low, monotonous tones that sounded almost like a wailing chant. "Jakie, your papa is sick. He is laying in bed. His face is so white—" she was swaying, almost falling. Jack caught her arm.

"Please, Mama," he pulled a chair nearer and gently pushed her into it. "Sit down, Mama, sit down." He placed a chair opposite her and sank into it, his breath coming fast and hard. He had completely forgotten Mary, who moved unobtrusively to a corner in the room where she could watch Jack's face.

"Your papa is sick, Jakie. All the time he is talking about you," Mrs. Rabinowitz continued in the same monotones, scarcely seeing the boy with the black face and the ungainly red mouth who sat in front of her. "His eyes is open like a baby's eyes. His face is white like a yahrzeit candle. All the time he talks from his son. He was saying this day, 'Sara,' he said—his voice was so low I could hardly hear him—he said, 'maybe Jakie will come tonight and sing in the Synagogue.'"

"Did he really say that, Mama?" Jack leaned forward, strangely touched by his mother's message. His father wanted him to come back—to come back and sing in the Synagogue. He had forgiven him, perhaps; had forgotten the grudge he bore against his son.

"He said it—the way I'm setting here this minute, he said it," Mrs. Rabinowitz repeated dully in the same sing-song tones. "For five generations God always heard a Rabinowitz sing every Day of Atonement, every holy day, every Sabbath. God is used to it now." She looked up sorrowfully, her eyes pleading pathetically. "Jakie, your papa is dying, maybe God will ask him, 'Is Jakie singing in the Synagogue tonight?' How can he say, 'No, he is singing in the theayter!'" She paused, staring straight ahead.

A slight moan escaped Jack's lips. He shook his head miserably, while Mary, from her corner, was viewing with consternation the effect of this visit on Jack. She couldn't help but feel sorry for the dejected woman who sat there so mournfully, her shawled shoulders sagging, her worn face so pitiful in her adversity. And yet—this was Jack's night of nights; the night that might make or mar the remainder of his theatrical career, and even his life. She turned away, sick at heart.

"You should come and sing, Jakie," Yudelson was urging from his place by the dressing table. "If you don't there is only Levy, the shamus, to sing—with a voice like a frog," he added in disgust.

"Oh, my son, mein zin, my heart is breaking in pieces." Mrs. Rabinowitz rocked back and forth, swaying, speaking like some uncanny automaton. "You got two hours before the sun goes out of the sky and it gets dark. Come with me home, Jakie."

"Mama, I can't! I can't do it!" Jack cried. "Can't you understand, Mama? This is my big chance tonight—the chance of my whole life. I've worked years for this. I want to make good. They're all banking on me. Mr. Lee—everybody—they've given me this one chance to make good. I've got to go on. If I come home now, Mama, don't you see it will be the end of everything for me? I can't give it up now. Please don't ask me to, Mama!"

But it was like addressing a plea to some unseeing, unbending goddess. Mrs. Rabinowitz scarcely heard the boy's words; she did not even understand what he meant. So much had happened—so many things to worry over—such great sorrow had been hers during the past two weeks that it had left her cold and numb. She knew only one thing—felt only one thing. Jakie must come home and sing in the Synagogue that night for the sake of his father. She had to make him come somehow. It didn't matter how, so long as he returned. She must not go back alone.

"You can't come?" Her voice was strained and coldly intense in its repetitional rhythm. "You can't come? How can you say this to me, your mama? When you was a little boy we was so poor. I worked so hard all the time for you. I slaved my fingers to the bone that there should be money to buy you nice things. My fingers, they used to bleed. Look at my hands, Jakie; it is still there the marks." She held out her rough, work-worn hands, exposing the knotted joints and the knobby fingers with the little black cuts interwoven like net work around the broken nails.

Jack bent over swiftly and took the hands with the blue veins standing out on them like bas-relief. He patted them tenderly. "I know, Mama, I know," he whispered hoarsely, the tears starting to his eyes.

A knock sounded at the door. Gene thrust his head into the room. "Your specialty'll be on in a minute, Mr. Robin," he announced, looking curiously over the little gathering that seemed to create an air of tense drama in that tiny room.

"All right, Gene." Jack rose wearily, his mother's hands still in his. "Mama," he turned to the figure on the chair, "I haven't time to tell you—I've got to go on. But you must try to understand, Mama. I'll explain it to you—just a little while. Yudelson—Mary," he turned for the first time since his mother's entrance to the girl. "Mary, tell my mother—"

"Wait, Jack, I'll go out and see if I can't get them to hold it for you for a few minutes." She flashed through the room like a flaming meteor, so bright and sparkling she seemed in the dull drabness that had fallen on the room. She patted Jack's arm and smiled up at him, the briefest sort of smile, as she sped out the door and into the wings.

"And, Jakie, more your papa said," Mrs. Rabinowitz continued in that same uncanny voice that sounded so strange and unnatural. "Your papa said, 'Ask Jakie he should forgive me. He is doing things from sin, but he don't mean it. In his heart he is a Rabinowitz.' Jakie, the way I'm setting here this minute, before God I swear it—that is what he said." She rose to her feet. Even the oath did not unsettle this supernatural calm that had settled like a cloud over the woman who must have her son back at any cost.

"I know, Mama! I believe you!" Jack's voice was near to breaking. "I believe you."

"We're waiting for you, Mr. Robin." Gene appeared in the door way, his temper slightly ruffled. "We can't hold it any longer."

no cost, and who have been active day and night gathering in subscriptions and votes. Just who those fortunate ones will be is a big question, but we do know that out of a possible six or eight candidates who are really trying, six will win prizes and the others will collect only their commissions, according to the campaign plan.

The procrastinators will go along in the hope that their friends will pull them through at the end, but what an awakening they are in for! Nothing will pull them through other than their own efforts, and by the way some of them have been trying, their efforts will not count for much, as little or no effort has been put forth by these few. Unless some of the candidates wake up, as they have been—repeatedly warned to do, they will be lost when the awards are given out April 14.

Ten days and it's all over. It's a safe bet that at no future time will such a meritorious offer be given by this newspaper and those who fail to take advantage of this proposition will lose the one big chance of a century to win a $1375 Buick Sedan, a $730 Chevrolet Sedan, a living room suite, absolutely free. The time to win these prizes is now, during the present offer, which closes Thursday.

Think what it means to add 380,000 extra votes to your reserve stock. Think what a satisfied feeling you will have when you deftly tuck that 380,000 bonus ballot away and turn it in the last day with the others you have been saving. Just think what a little extra work will accomplish for you.

Go after your friends and collect those promises. It's plainly up to you; don't let this opportunity slip. You will rue it if you do. Prizes will be won by those having the greatest number of votes—nothing else. Make yourself unbeatable by landing that 380,000 bonus ballot Thursday night.

"RELIGION AND HOPE"

Wednesday

"The Defeat of Evil"

SCRIPTURE: Memory Verse; "To them that love God all things work together for good" (Romans 8:28.)

Read: II Corinthians 12:1-10.

MEDITATION; The Christian religion does not deny evil. Neither does it succeed wholly in explaining it. It provides a way to meet and defeat it by turning it to good account. "What do you smell?" asked a chemist, as he held to another's nose a vial of artificial perfume. "The most fragrant lilies of the valley," replied the other. "No" said the chemist, "What you smell is camphor balls." Miss Maude Royden is quoted as saying: "When people ask me for an explanation of suffering, I tell them that I have none. But I tell them that I have a power that can conquer suffering." Christianity has from the first increased the capacity of men to use pain and to transmute it into something good. If good can be made out of evil, then evil ceases to stand in the way of hope.

PRAYER: Quicken in us the spirit of courage. May we go forth with hopeful minds to the duties and conditions of this day, believing that with Thy help we can fashion something out of whatever material the day will provide. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Smoot told Senator Walsh (D) of Montana, that Fall never mentioned McLean's name to him. Smoot said Lenroot told him, after leaving the conference with Fall, that the former Secretary of Interior intended to say the "loan" came from McLean. Lenroot testified both Senators were in the room when Fall spoke of McLean. Otherwise, both Senators corroborated each other in denying they had influenced Fall to use McLean's name.

Hays will have more than Fall's charge to explain. Special agents for the committee have checked up his banking account in a Sullivan, Ind., bank, located a large deposit of 4-1-4 per cent Liberty Bonds and are now trailing those bonds. This inquiry was launched when reports reached the committee that Hays had handled large sums of Liberty Bonds for the Republican National committee in 1922 and 1923. Hays already has admitted receiving $260,000 in bonds, but of a 3-1-2 percent issue, from Harry F. Sinclair. He was never questioned about other bonds.

WEIGHT COMPLICATION HALTS CLUMP-GRACE TILT

COHEN-DUNDEE ARE SIGNED TO FILL BIG CARD

Pair Are Expected to Show Clever Boxing—Both Good Fighters.

Due to weight complications the main event at the Athletic club between Russ Clump and Ervin Grace next Saturday night will be called off. However a much better pair of welterweights have been set up at the expense of the promoter so as not to disappoint the fans.

Benny Cohen, who recently moved from Chicago to Columbus is getting ready at the Capitol city to meet the well known Johnny Dundee of Toledo, at the C. A. C. gym. Cohen, just last week, fought a fast draw with Joe O'Malley in Harrisburg. He is without doubt one of the cleverest boxers at his weight that we have, having started his career as a bantam and worked up welterweight. He beat Johnny Carpenter when he was a featherweight. He has beaten Danny Huff, Joe Catilano, Joe Minoco, Eddie Moore, Ray Smith, and many others.

Dundee from Toledo at 145 pounds is known as the best man of his weight from that city. He is a great slugger, constantly boring in and making it tough for his opponents.

Much interest has been aroused over the four round preliminary match between Charley Scott and Kid Moats. Moats made his debut at the club on the last card and surprised the fans by stopping K. O. Hill in one round. Scott is determined to put an end to that so this should be a good scrap.

THOUSANDS TOIL TO REPAIR DAMAGE

TOLEDO, O., April 4—(UP)—While more than a thousand men worked almost night and day over the week-end to repair damage of the recent sleet storm, northwestern Ohio still was seriously crippled Monday morning.

It will be fully a week before business may be resumed in anything like normal preparations in many districts.

Hundreds of men were engaged in removing from highways the telephone poles and broken limbs of trees, dragged to the ground by the sleet that fell Thursday and Friday.

Although no loss of life was reported in the rural districts, as a result of the storm, the two men were in a serious condition Monday indirectly as the result of the storm.

This old world of ours is full of surprises. California actually reported that dishes were rattled out there by an earthquake, Monday. —Marion, O., Star.

200 Ann Arbor Students Try For Football Team

ANN ARBOR, April 4—(INS)—More than 200 students will engage in regular football workouts at the University of Michigan next fall under the new "A" and "B" team plan as compared with about three score in the past.

Heretofore the varsity squad was whittled down to about 35 men after the season started, although more than 60 reported for practice.

With the new arrangement Coach Elton T. 'Tad' Weiman says he will retain a working squad of about 65 men.

The reserve squad of the past will be dispensed with. In its stead, Coach Weiman will institute what is known as an intramural league. Those who enjoy the gridiron sport but who are not proficient enough to make the "A" or "B" squads will be divided into teams representing the four classes.

SANITARY AND CLEAN "CHICK" YARDS NEEDED

Poultry Expert Gives Some Timely Suggestions to Raisers Here.

By G. S. VICKERS
Field Manager, Ohio Accredited Hatcheries

Very few poultry diseases can be satisfactorily cured with medicine. In view of this fact, by far the best policy is disease prevention rather than attempted cure. Hence the saying— "Sanitation and Cleanliness the best medicines."

In addition to diseases are intestinal worms which are responsible for untold losses in the poultry business. Worms do much more damage in young stock than in old, and in cases of serious infestation there is practically no chance of ridding the flock of worms without rendering the flock almost useless for future profits. Hence again prevention is the best medicine.

Clean Houses and Clean Ground

As mentioned in a previous article of this series, the brooder house should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before chicks are put in so that no possible infection will be obtained because of the germs present in the house. It is a good idea every week or so to give the house a good cleaning and disinfection. It is possible that germs are carried in by birds, dogs, even by the attendants in walking from the old flock to the young flock, and no chances should be taken in allowing disease to break out if at all possible to prevent it. The droppings should be removed often and taken away from the chick range because they are a constant source of reinfection in case any of the chicks have any diseases.

The ground is a constant source of infection for chicks if it was used the previous season for chicks or if the old birds have been ranging on it. Disease germs will hang over in the soil from year to year, and if there were any germs last season, it is likely they are still present in potent form. Worm eggs will live in the soil from year to year.

For these reasons the brooder house should be moved to ground on which no chicks or old birds have ranged for two years or more.. In other words, it is probably safe to range chicks on the same ground every third year so far as we know at the present time. This ground should be cultivated in the meantime so as to get fresh soil to the surface. This system makes it necessary to have movable brooded houses that can be moved from year to year, and even during the same year.

In bad outbreaks of coccidiosis, one of the worst chick diseases, it is often advisable to move the houses several times during the season in order to get away from infected soil and danger of re-infection.

This range for the chicks should contain an ample supply of green food. A good alfalfa or clover range is hard to beat. This furnishes excellent green feed, and there is less danger of the chicks picking up droppings than on the bare ground.

In some sections of the country where the poultry farms are small, and where all the ground they have is infected badly with disease and infested with worms, they are rearing their chicks in confinement on concrete or wire floors which can be cleaned and disinfected daily, thereby preventing infection or bad outbreaks of disease. While this system will control disease and worms it is not likely that as strong and vigorous pullets can be grown as when ranged on good, clean outdoor ranges.

Keep Stocks Separated

There are comparatively few mature flocks which do not have some disease present or which are not infested to a more or less extent with worms. Losses may not be heavy, but nevertheless, if they may contaminate the ground they man contaminate the ground and be the cause of outbreaks in the young stock which is much more susceptible than the old old stock. For instance, some of the old birds may be carriers of the coccidiosis germs although it may do them little harm, and its presence in the old stock not even suspected. Yet when running with the chicks, the old stock may contaminate the ground and cause outbreaks.

Many old flocks may be slightly infested with worms, and while little damage is done to them, they will almost surely cause heavy infestations and large losses in young stock. Tuberculosis is rather prevalent in sections of Ohio, and if young and old range together, they are almost certain to pass this infection to the young stock.

As mentioned at the outset, treatment of these various troubles is not very satisfactory. Every effort should be made to keep the chicks away from possible sources of disease infection and worms. This means always clean and sanitary surroundings.

We are here, not simply to get enough to eat so as to keep alive nor to accumulate enough goods so as to be comfortable but we have to grow a life so fine and useful that it will bring joy to others, be worth keeping alive.
